Intercollegiate Studies Institute Essay

The task of defining American identity is an ongoing, and seemingly endless, project and one that each generation must take up anew. That is why the Intercollegiate Studies Institute has developed a high school essay contest to honor one of America's founding fathers.

George Washington conspicuously stands out from among the other central figures of the founding era and earns Lighthorse Harry Lee's encomium as having been "First in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen..." The institute's theme this year is "George Washington and the Formation of the American Character."

This essay contest is open to any high school student. If you are interested in this essay contest you must register for the contest online at www.isi.org by November 28, 2008 and the essay will be due on January 23, 2009.
